Biographical / Historical

Amy Goldin (1926-1978) was an art critic, author, and educator in New York, New York.

Goldin started her career in art as a painter in her birthplace of Detroit, Michigan. She attended Wayne University from 1944 to 1946 before attending the University of Chicago from 1946 to 1948. She continued her training in painting after receiving the Art Students' League scholarship for 1948 to 1949 and a scholarship to train under Hans Hofmann from 1950 to 1952. She eventually settled in New York City.

Goldin was a prolific writer over the course of her short career as an art critic. She was contributing editor for the publications Arts, Arts News and Art in America. In 1972 she received a National Endowment Critic's Grant to study with Dr. Oleg Grabar, a leading scholar on Islamic art, at Harvard University and traveled to Iran to study the country's architecture. Goldin devoted much of her career to covering topics such as Islamic art, decoration and pattern, and examining folk art from an original viewpoint. In 1976 the College Art Association awarded her the Frank Jewett Mather award for distinguished art criticism.

Goldin was also a visiting lecturer and educator at the University of California in San Diego, Northwestern University, and Queens College. Goldin and Dr. Michael Brown of Queens College collaborated on the book Collective Behavior (1974) that explored style and collective behavior.

Goldin died of cancer in 1978 in New York, N.Y.

Series 3: Research and Writing Projects, 1950-1977

2 Linear feet (Boxes 1-3, OV 4)

Scope and Contents: This series documents Goldin's writing projects, writing projects by others or unidentified authors, and research material documenting Goldin's career as an art critic and historian. Records relate to Goldin's work as a contributing editor to the publications Arts, Art News, and Art in America, as well as to her freelance work.

In 1969 Goldin served as a consultant to the Helena Rubenstein Foundation, and in 1972 began collaborating with Dr. Michael Brown of Queens College, with whom she wrote Collective Behavior: A Review and Reinterpretation of the Literature which was published in 1974. Work related to these projects is also documented here. Researchers should note that Goldin sometimes used the name Amy Mendelson.

3.1: Writing Projects by Goldin, circa 1965-circa 1973

Scope and Contents: The subseries consists of drafts, typescripts, related research material, notes, correspondence, and other material relating to Goldin's numerous projects. These include a teacher's manual titled Art for Young America.
