Summary:	The Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World collection consists of film materials and associated documentation for the editing process of the ten-episode ethnographic television series aired in 1992 and hosted by Harvard anthropologist David Maybury-Lewis. The collection consists of field sound, camera original film in the form of outtakes and trims, edited silent film (A and B rolls and prints), and technical paper documentation including field and lab reports.

Administrative Information

Acquisition Information

The Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World collection was donated to the National Anthropological Film Collection (formerly the Human Studies Film Archives) by series co-producer and co-director Richard Meech in 2012.

Processing Information

Audiovisual materials have been grouped, rehoused, and numbered for preservation and access. Paper materials were separated from film and placed into series. Sound recordings remain unprocessed and some have not been identified with subject names.

Contact the National Anthropological Film Collection for further item-level documentation, including the latent key numbers for each roll of outtakes and trims (see "Scope and Content" for details).

Processed by Annie Schweikert, Caroline Waller, and Pam Wintle, 2012-2017; encoded by Annie Schweikert, 2017.

Administrative History

The television program Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World, hosted by Harvard anthropologist David Maybury-Lewis, was a television series aired in 1992 that interrogated universal human themes such as death, life, love, and spirituality in the lives of a wide range of indigenous peoples at the turn of the millennium. The program juxtaposed lives and customs in tribal societies with those of urban Canadians to underline the relevance of indigenous values.

Maybury-Lewis, at the time professor of anthropology and the curator of South American Ethnology in Harvard's Peabody Museum of Archeology and Ethnology, worked extensively in Brazil and particularly with the Xavante. He was also co-founder of Cultural Survival, a nonprofit organization dedicated to the preservation of culture, land, and human rights of indigenous peoples.

Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World was created by Richard Meech and Michael Grant and written by Adrian Malone. The series was co-produced by Biniman Productions Limited, Adrian Malone Productions Limited, BBC-TV and KCET Los Angeles, in association with the Global Television Network, and with the cooperation of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, PBS, Rogers Telefund, and Telefilm Canada.

The Millennium film collection is a collection of footage that was eventually edited into episodes of the Public Broadcasting System television program Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World, hosted by Harvard anthropologist David Maybury-Lewis. The series interrogated universal human themes such as death, life, love, and spirituality in the lives of a wide range of indigenous peoples at the turn of the millennium, comparing lives and values in tribal societies to those of urban Canadians.

Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World was created by Richard Meech and Michael Grant and written by Adrian Malone. The series was co-produced by Biniman Productions Limited, Adrian Malone Productions Limited, BBC-TV and KCET Los Angeles, in association with the Global Television Network, and with the cooperation of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, PBS, Rogers Telefund, and Telefilm Canada.

Scope and Contents

The Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World collection, 1989-1992, undated, comprises edited and unedited film, audio, and associated paper documentation. Footage in edited form includes A and B rolls and some resulting prints, while unedited film is in the form of trims and outtakes. Depending on the stage in the editing process, film is associated either with a general subject or with a specific edited title. Audio is largely 1/4-inch audio tapes of original field sound and translations. Associated paper documentation is largely technical and lab reports and does not exist consistently for subjects and episodes.

Of note is the large collection of trims and outtakes. As these rolls are camera original film, they are printed with "latent key numbers" along the edge of the film, or codes that advance sequentially through the roll. Each roll is associated with a unique range of latent key numbers, allowing researchers to trace camera original film through the editing process and narrow down filming order. Sequences removed from trims and outtakes for use in final episode cuts are also associated with these latent key number ranges. The National Anthropological Film Collection holds searchable lists of the collection's latent key numbers; contact the NAFC for more detail.

Arrangement

The Millennium: Tribal Wisdom and the Modern World collection is arranged in 3 series: Series 1. Edited film materials, circa 1992; Series 2. Unedited film materials, 1989-1991, undated; Series 3. Technical documentation, 1989-1991, undated.

Episode list

1. The Shock of the Other: This episode follows Maybury-Lewis and crew as they film the Xavante people of western Brazil; La Rábida Friary, a small Franciscan monastery in southern Spain; and the Machiguenga, Yaminawa, and Mashco-Piro peoples of Peru. Filmed on the Madre de Dios River is a saloon and funeral in Laberinto. Filmed on the Manu River is a hunter-gather family of the Yaminawa, a tribe recently decimated by disease; a visit to a Machiguenga village; and a glimpse of the Mashco-Piro.
2. Strange Relations: This episode focuses on cultural components of marriage, courtship, and romantic love and the place of romantic love in marriage. Filmed is the Wodaabe (Bororo), a subgroup of the Fulani ethnic group of southern Niger and northern Nigeria, including a traditional Yaake dance during the Guerewol Festival and the marriage of a Wodaabe man to his third wife; the wedding of Rodney and Jennifer, an American couple in their forties; and the Nyimba of northwestern Nepal, including a fraternal polyandrous marriage.
3. Mistaken Identity: This episode focuses on the formation and understandings of personal and group identity in various cultures. This episode includes footage of the Weyewa of Sumba in Indonesia, focusing on the importance of words and language in their culture and their traditional funeral practice, which includes a collective moving of a massive stone block; "Day Nurse," a Canadian abortion counselor, focusing on family planning, adoption, and abortion practices in 'modern' western culture ("Day Nurse"); the Xavante of western Brazil, focusing on the "coming of age" process for males; and Tammy, a girl who attempted suicide, focusing on contemporary mental health and identity struggles in western culture.

4. An Ecology of Mind: This episode focuses on the relationships between various societies and their environments, physically and symbolically, and the environmental destruction caused by modern society. The episode includes the return of aboriginal people to remote Cape York Peninsula in Far North Queensland, Australia, 70 years after they were forcibly removed from their lands; the Gabra of the Chalbi Desert in northern Kenya and highlands of southern Ethiopia, exploring the different ways the Gabra rely on their environment, including goat, camel, and cattle herding and the search for natural resources and water in the desert; Heather Apple, a Canadian organic gardener who runs Canadian Organic Growers' Heritage Seed Program; and the Makuna of Colombia, exploring their spiritual relationship with the environment and their annual Peach Palm Festival.

6. Touching the Timeless: This episode draws on specific ethnographic examples to examine the roles, practices, and goals of spiritual systems across the world and how different cultures draw meaning from spiritual practices. Footage includes a lama in Nyimba of northwestern Nepal, including a discussion of "The Hidden Valley" in Nepal; the Huichol, or Wixáritari, people living in the Sierra Madre Occidental Mountain Range on Central Mexico, including a pilgrimage led by a shaman, ending in the procurement of peyote; and the Navajo, a Native American tribe of the southwest United States, including a medicine man, chanting, and sand painting process.

5. The Art of Living: This episode focuses on the ways art is used, valued, and interpreted by various societies and argues that the separation of art and daily life exists only in modern nation states and that art is an important aspect of personal identity. The episode includes footage of a Canadian family visiting an art museum; the Wodaabe (Bororo), a subgroup of the Fulani ethnic group of southern Niger and northern Nigeria, including a young woman's experience at the Guerewol festival; the Dogon of Mali, including their cultural interpretation of death and funeral practices; and Jack Pollock, a Canadian painter dying of AIDS.

7. A Poor Man Shames Us All: This episode explores various cultural understandings of wealth and argues that society should value people over things in the coming millennium. Episode includes footage of a reenactment of "The Gift of the Magi"; a Sanitation Worker in New York City; the Weyewa of Sumba in Indonesia, focusing on their funeral practice that includes a collective moving of a massive stone block; Amsterdam, focusing the cityscape, bikes, a church, holy relics, and banking; the chairman of BBDO Advertising Agency, advertiser for Pepsi; and the Gabra of the Chalbi Desert in northern Kenya and highlands of southern Ethiopia, showing herding practices, nomad camps, and desert life.

8. Inventing Reality: This episode focuses on cultural belief systems and how various societies understand reality and spiritual beliefs. The episode argues against the "modern" western separation of scientific knowledge and spiritual belief systems. Footage includes a television interview of a United States park ranger who survived seven hits by lightning; the Huichol, or Wixáritari, people living in the Sierra Madre Occidental Mountain Range on Central Mexico, focusing on traditional healing practices and how they interact and clash with "modern" western medical practices; a Canadian doctor experimenting with psychological and spiritual healing, focusing on his work with Jane Ekers, a woman battling cancer; and the Goolarabooloo community, a small Australian aboriginal group near Broome, focusing on the perspectives of an aboriginal and a Dutch man and their understandings of tribal beliefs concerning time, ritual, supernatural forces, illusion, and reality.

9. The Tighrope of Power: This episode explores the relationships between indigenous cultures and the modern western world, providing examples of how power structures have overlooked the voices and needs of indigenous communities, and arguing for cultural diversity. This episode includes the Mohawk people, an Iroquoian-speaking indigenous people of North America, living on the Kahnawake reserve in Quebec, Canada, including footage of a Mohawk school and the Oka land dispute, exploring the importance of language to culture and identity. This episode also includes Elijah Harper, a Canadian politician and chief of Oji-Cree First Nation, with footage of the rejection of the Meech Lake Accord.

10. At the Threshold: This final episode wraps up the themes of the series and argues that westerners should value and learn from other world cultures, belief systems, and traditions as the world moves into the new millennium. This episode includes footage of a Navajo family, a Native American tribe of the southwest United States, including sheep shearing, weaving, storytelling, and traditional "Hogan" dwellings; a small French farm, focusing on a 12th century love story Abelard and Héloïse and the modern French family occupying the working farm; Elijah Harper, a Canadian Mohawk politician who opposed the Meech Lake Accord; and the Nyimba of northwestern Nepal, including footage of a fraternal polyandrous marriage.

Series 2: Unedited film materials, 1989-1991, undated

1,336 film reels (in 399 cans; silent color negative outtakes and trims; 16mm)

172 sound cassettes

701 sound tape reels (1/4 inch tape)

This series consists of original, unedited film and sound materials from the Millennium film project, 1989-1991 and undated. It contains original color negative film, much of which did not make the final edited episode cuts, and 1/4 inch audio tapes of original field sound and translations. Subject labels indicate tribal groups, individuals, or recording locations, and span the globe. Note that footage of a subject may have appeared in multiple episodes and thus cannot be keyed to a specific title; see episode list at beginning of finding aid for final episode content.

Original film materials within the Millennium collection comprise just over 1300 rolls of silent camera original rolls. Rolls are of two types: outtakes (1253 rolls, 400 feet or less each), and trims (65 rolls, 1000 feet each). These materials do not appear in the final cuts of the program. Film rolls have been rehoused into archival cans of 2-12 rolls each.

Note that as these rolls are camera original film, they are printed with "latent key numbers" along the edge of the film, or codes that advance sequentially through the roll. Each roll is associated with a unique range of latent key numbers, allowing researchers to trace camera original film through the editing process and narrow down filming order. Sequences removed from trims and outtakes for use in final episode cuts are also associated with these latent key number ranges. The National Anthropological Film Collection holds searchable lists of the collection's latent key numbers; contact the NAFC for more detail. Also see subseries 3.1. Removals cards, for the latent key number ranges of sequences removed from outtake and trim rolls during the editing process.

Original sound recordings are largely 1/4 inch audio tape with sync pulses, and comprises field sound and translations, as well as some apparent David Maybury-Lewis narration. These recordings' inclusion in final program edits is undetermined. Sound recordings are minimally processed as of July 2017; contact the NAFC for more information.

This series is arranged in 3 subseries: 2.1 Outtakes, 1989-1991, undated; 2.2 Trims, 1989-1991, undated; 2.3 Sound recordings, 1989-1991, undated.

2.1: Outtakes, 1989-1991, undated

Outtakes comprise material left on original camera rolls when footage was removed to be used in episodes. Note the presence of some episode titles in the series of outtakes (usually indicating trims); these rolls had been numbered and separated following the outtakes pattern.

See subseries 3.1. Removals cards for an inventory of the footage (delineated by first and last latent key number) removed from outtake rolls to be used in final cuts of episodes.

Arranged alphabetically by subject. Item numbers refer to cans, which hold 2-12 rolls of film each.

Series 3: Technical documentation, 1989-1991, undated

4.37 Linear Feet

This series consists of technical documentation associated with the editing and production process of the Millennium film project. It contains sound and picture documentation from several points in the production process, including on-location reports, transferring and processing reports, and timing strips, as well as index cards listing sequences of original camera footage used in the edited episodes.

See episode list at beginning of finding aid for more information on episode subjects.

This series consists of 3 subseries: 3.1 Removals cards, 1989-1991, undated; 3.2 Technical reports, 1990-1991, undated; 3.3 Timing strips, circa 1991.

Series 3.1: Removals cards, 1989-1991, undated

Index cards listing original camera footage removed for use in edited episodes. Footage removed from outtake rolls were likely used in final cuts of episodes. Footage was also removed from some trim rolls and apparently sent for lab work (potentially to create special effects); inclusion in final episode cuts is unestablished. Removals are delineated by their first and last latent key numbers, from which they may be associated with their original camera rolls; contact the NAFC for a list of latent key number ranges by camera roll.

See subseries 2.1 for list of outtake rolls and 2.2 for list of trim rolls.

Arranged alphabetically by subject.
