Collection Overview

Repository:	National Anthropological Archives
Title:	Cynthia Irwin-Williams papers
Date:	1936-1990
Identifier:	NAA.1999-09
Creator:	Irwin-Williams, Cynthia Irwin, Henry T.
Extent:	111.67 Linear feet (192 document boxes, 4 oversize boxes, 18 shoeboxes, 4 small index card boxes, 5 negative boxes, 4 map folders, 30 rolled items, and 6 1/2 restricted boxes) 3 Floppy discs 9 Cassette tapes 1 Sound tape reel (3")
Language:	English .
Summary:	Cynthia Irwin-Williams was a pioneer for women in the field of archaeology. Her main interest was the Paleo-Indian culture of North America (specifically the Southwest), but she also did extensive work in Ancestral Pueblo (Anasazi) culture. This collection includes materials related to Irwin-Williams' research; her work at Eastern New Mexico University and The Desert Research Institute; her coursework at Radcliffe and Harvard; and her work for the Society of American Archaeology, the American Anthropological Association, the American Quaternary Association, Africa Tomorrow, and other organizations.

Processing Information

Irwin-Williams' papers were rehoused in acid free folders and boxes. Reprints and newsletters without annotations and duplicate materials were removed from the collection. Materials not related to Irwin-Williams' work as an anthropologist (predominately materials related to her family or her work with Alcoholics Anonymous) were also removed from the collection and those containing personally identifiable information were shredded. Titles in square brackets were supplied by the archivist. Abbreviations in folder titles have been expanded in the finding aid for clarity.

When received by the archives, the materials were only roughly organized. Some order was imposed by the archivist, but some organization is still rough.

Biographical Note

Cynthia Irwin-Williams was a pioneer for women in the field of archaeology. Her main interest was the Paleo-Indian culture of North America (specifically the Southwest), but she also did extensive work in Ancestral Pueblo (Anasazi) culture. She was born in Denver, Colorado, in 1936 and suffered from severe asthma for the first ten years of her life (Williams, 4). She and her brother, Henry Irwin, spent several summers during their childhood living with the Hopi in northeastern Arizona, which helped her to develop an interest in archaeology. She began taking part in amateur archaeological investigations through the Colorado Archaeological Society when she was in 5th grade and continued to do so through high school (Williams, 6). She organized an archaeology club while in high school and persuaded H. Marie Wormington, Herbert Dick, and Ruth Underhill to assist (Williams, 7). Irwin-Williams and her brother also volunteered for Dr. Wormington at the Denver Museum of Natural History throughout high school, eventually assisting Wormington at a dig in western Colorado (Williams, 7). Dr. Wormington became a friend and role model for Irwin-Williams, advising her on her education and career. Irwin-Williams also had a close relationship with her mother, Eleanor "Kay" Irwin, who frequently travelled and worked digs with her daughter, and her brother, Henry Irwin, with whom she worked many archaeological sites and published numerous papers.

Irwin-Williams earned her BA (1957) and MA (1958) in Anthropology from Radcliffe College and was one of the first three women, in any field, to earn her PhD (1963) from Harvard University (previously, women could only receive PhD degrees from Radcliffe). She had difficulty gaining a place in a fieldschool during her graduate work due to her gender, despite having experience under the guidance of H. Marie Wormington in high school and college, but eventually gained a place as a volunteer graduate student on the dig of one of her professors at L'Abri Pataud in France in 1958 (likely under Dr. Hallam Movius). She was disappointed that, unlike the male students, she was expected to perform secretarial work and menial tasks (Williams, 10). As a result of this experience, she chose to run her own excavations and stated that it taught her "how not to run a project" (Williams, 10). This experience also caused her to change her field of study to the New World and her advisor to J. O. Brew (Williams, 11).

While Irwin-Williams and her brother were in college and graduate school, they and their mother, under the supervision of H. Marie Wormington, spent summers excavating the LoDaisKa site in Colorado, providing their own equipment (Williams, 9). The first major excavation which she headed was at Valsequillo, where she worked from 1962 to 1966. Valsequillo, in Puebla, Mexico, is a stone age site dated to approximately 25,000 years ago (the dating of the site has been controversial). Her largest excavation was at Salmon Ruin; this site was almost destroyed when the land was purchased by a developer in 1967 who intended to "divide the ruin into 10-foot squares and sell 'digging rights'" (Irwin-Williams, 19). After a local non-profit, the San Juan County Museum Association, saved the site, they asked Irwin-Williams to run the excavations in 1969 (Irwin-Williams, 20).

The excavations she led were known for being inclusive, as her crews included men and women, people of multiple races and ethnicities, and people with disabilities (Williams, 16). She was also known for her ability to work well with volunteers and amateurs (Williams, 19). Another talent of hers was finding grant funding from unusual sources, which she attributed to the limited employment and fieldwork opportunities faced by female archaeologists in the 1960s (Profile of an Anthropologist, 7).

In addition to her fieldwork, Irwin-Williams taught anthropology, first at Hunter College (1963-1964), while holding a fellowship at the American Museum of Natural History and commuting from Princeton where her husband worked, and then at Eastern New Mexico University (1964-1982), at which time "she commute[d] nearly five hundred miles each weekend between her home in Albuquerque, where she live[d] four days a week with her husband, and her apartment in Portales, where she [taught] three days a week." (Williams, 1). She then became Executive Director of the Social Sciences Center, Desert Research Institute, University of Nevada. Under her supervision, the Social Sciences Center (later renamed the Quaternary Science Center) expanded substantially, eventually employing more than five times the staff it had when she began (Teague, 90). Irwin-Williams also held numerous professional offices including President of the Society for American Archaeology (1977-1979). She was known for her interdisciplinary work and had an interest in the environmental impact of human society and water harvesting techniques. These interests led her to become a member of the executive committee of Africa Tomorrow Inc., a nonprofit devoted to the Sahel region of Africa, and to lobby Congress to pass a bill to create a pilot project focused on water harvesting (Teague, 90).

Irwin-Williams also had a keen interest in issues which affected women. After going into recovery for alcoholism, she became an accredited counselor and served as a part-time substance abuse counselor from 1982 through 1989. She also brought this interest to her research, studying the genetic and environmental causes of alcoholism as well as the effects of alcoholism on families, conducting a study funded by the Stout Foundation entitled "Breaking the Chain: Defining Effective Education for Adult Children of Alcoholics." Her interest in studying health conditions which affected women did not end with alcoholism. A sufferer of migraines, she researched their causes and treatments in a study entitled "Biochemistry, Population Parameters, and Treatment of Migraine Headache."

During the final few years of her life, she suffered from a respiratory illness which interfered with her work, causing her to step down from her position as director of the Quaternary Science Center at the Desert Research Institute in 1988 and to take a sabbatical in 1989. She died in 1990 at the age of 54.

Scope and Contents

The Cynthia Irwin-Williams papers contain fieldnotes, photographs, maps, notes, computer analyses, drafts of articles, articles and papers, grant proposals, index cards, personal and professional correspondence, administrative materials, lecture and research notes, student papers and theses, certificates and awards, biographical and autobiographical materials, and sound recordings. These materials relate to her research (primarily archaeological), associations of which she was a member (including the Society of American Archaeology, the American Anthropological Association, the American Quaternary Association, and Africa Tomorrow), conferences at which she participated, and coursework from Radcliffe and Harvard. The collection also includes some materials which belonged to her brother, Henry Irwin, who predeceased her. These materials are composed of his diplomas and some annotated articles and papers.

Irwin-Williams was a prolific letter writer and many folders include multiple drafts of her correspondence. Of particular interest is the correspondence between Irwin-Williams and her mother, Eleanor "Kay" Irwin. The two were very close and corresponded almost daily during the two years when Irwin-Williams was in Massachusetts and her mother was in Colorado. Of special note in the collection are materials which relate to the difficulties faced by women in the field of archaeology, such as the autobiographical section of her CV.

The collection does not include much material on her work at Magic Mountain, as these papers are housed at the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology. Many of the materials related to her work at Salmon Ruins are housed at the San Juan County Research Center and Library. The only expedition for which this collection holds complete fieldnotes for Irwin-Williams and her team is Valsequillo.

Sensitivity statement

Please note that the contents of the collection and the language and terminology used reflect the context and culture of the time of its creation. As an historical document, its contents may be at odds with contemporary views and terminology and considered offensive today. The information within this collection does not reflect the views of the Smithsonian Institution or National Anthropological Archives but is available in its original form to facilitate research.

Please note that this collection contains images of human remains.

Container Listing

Series 1: Research, 1936-1990, undated

61.28 Linear feet (95.5 document boxes, 17 shoeboxes, 4 small index card boxes, portions of 4 oversize boxes, portions of 4 map folders, and 28 rolled items)

2 Floppy discs

Arrangement: This series is arranged in 7 subseries: (1.1) Archaeology, 1936-1990, undated; (1.2) Climate studies, 1972-1990, undated; (1.3) Alcoholism, 1981-1987, undated; (1.4) Migraine, 1981-1987, undated; (1.5) Miscellaneous, undated; (1.6) Grants, 1961-1989, undated; and (1.7) Note cards, undated.

Scope and Contents: This series contains materials related to research conducted by Irwin-Williams. The majority of the materials fall within the Subseries 1.1: Archaeology. The series contains fieldnotes, photographs, maps, notes, computer analyses, drafts of articles, grant proposals, and index cards.

Restrictions: Materials containing social security numbers (unless the number belongs to someone known to be deceased), references, and student grades have been restricted for eighty years from the date of their creation. Computer disks are restricted for preservation reasons.

Subseries 1.1: Archaeology, 1936-1990, undated

Arrangement: This subseries is arranged alphabetically.

Scope and Contents: This subseries contains materials related to Irwin-Williams' archaeological work. It is larger than any other sub-series, or even series, in the collection, accounting for approximately eighty-three percent of Series 1 and approximately forty-five percent of the collection as a whole. It includes fieldnotes, photographs, maps, and other materials. Projects with the largest body of materials include the Salmon Ruin and Valsequillo excavations. There are also a substantial number of materials related to the Anasazi Origins Project / Archaic Oshara Project. Although there are some materials related to the Magic Mountain excavation included, most of the records for this excavation are held at the Peabody Museum. There are also materials related to the Salmon Ruin excavation at the San Juan County Research Center and Library.

Restrictions: Materials containing social security numbers (unless the number belongs to someone known to be deceased), references, and student grades have been restricted for eighty years from the date of their creation.

Anasazi origins project (AOPI) / Archaic Oshara project (AOPII), 1950-1989, undated

Notes: The Anasazi Origins project (AOPI) and Archaic Oshara project (AOPII) are two distinct phases of the same work. The first phase, or Anasazi Origins project, (1964-1973) focused on discovering the evolution of the people of the Southwest from the archaic hunter-gatherer society to the Anasazi sedentary culture. Excavations were conducted in northwestern New Mexico, primarily in the Arroyo Cuervo region. The study of these excavations led to the publication of "The Oshara Tradition: Origins of Anasazi Culture." Eastern New Mexico University Contributions in Anthropology 5, no. 3 (1973). The second phase, or Archaic Oshara project, (1981-1990) sought to gain a fuller understanding of the Oshara tradition by analyzing artifacts excavated during the first phase and excavating new sites, using new methods of excavation and analysis. Irwin-Williams died before the work on AOPII was completed and before the results were published. The project was later revisited by Kenneth Blake Vernon and Brian F. Coddling for Oshara Revisited: The Archaic Period in Northern New Mexico. (Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 2017).

The excavations showed evidence of agriculture at a preceramic site. The materials here relate to difficulties which arose year later due to dispute over the storage of the artifacts discovered in the excavation and a delay in their analysis.

	Hidalgo-Queretaro, 1959-1967, undated Notes: Irwin-Williams conducted excavations in Hidalgo and Queretaro, Mexico, between 1959 and 1960. Irwin-Williams had taken time off from Harvard to discover sites and perform excavations in Mexico on a grant from the National Science Foundation. She discovered these sites with the assistance of Braulio Garcia. Her analysis of the artifacts found during these excavations and artifacts from other sites of the same period can be found in the manuscript "Pre-ceramic and Early Ceramic Development in Central Mexico." Her work on this manuscript was conducted during a postdoctoral fellowship at the American Museum of Natural History and additional materials related to it can be found in the archives of their Division of Anthropology.

Notes: The excavations at Magic Mountain were performed by Irwin-Williams and her brother, Henry Irwin, between 1959 and 1960 with sponsorship from the Peabody Museum and were the subject of Irwin-Williams' PhD dissertation. These excavations are related to work they had previously performed at LoDaisKa, which, like Magic Mountain, is in the Rocky Mountain foothills of Colorado. The expedition records for these excavations are held by the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology at Harvard University.

Santa Theresa project, 1984-1986

Notes: The excavations at Santa Theresa were undertaken for the Bureau of Land Management as cultural resource management work when a developer wanted to build on the site. Irwin-Williams used the site to test the "density-dependent method."

	UP Mammoth Kill, after 1960
	Notes: The Union Pacific (UP) Mammoth Kill site is located in Carbon county, Wyoming. The mammoth skeleton on the site was excavated between 1960 and 1961 by Irwin-Williams, Henry Irwin, and George Agogino on behalf of Harvard University and the University of Wyoming with support from the National Geographic Society. C. Vance Haynes Jr. consulted on the dig. The field notes for this excavation are held by the Anthropology department at the University of Wyoming.

	Valsequillo, 1959-1982, undated
	Notes: Valsequillo, in Puebla, Mexico, was the first major excavation that Irwin-Williams headed. It was discovered by Irwin-Williams and Juan Armenta Camacho, who co-headed the excavation, while Irwin-Williams was seeking out sites in Mexico in 1959-1960 and conducted between 1962 and 1966. There are two major controversies surrounding the excavations at Valsequillo. The first is a result of allegations made by Jose Luis Lorenzo, the chief of the department and laboratories of prehistory in the Instituto Nacional de Antropología y Historia, that Irwin-Williams had planted the artifacts she found. She refuted this accusation in Comments on Allegations by J. L. Lorenzo Concerning Archaeological Research at Valsequillo, Puebla, Miscellaneous Publications , no. 1 (Portales: Paleoindian Institute, Eastern New Mexico University). The second controversy involves the dating of the site as the Uranium-series dates performed by B. Szabo of the United States Geological Survey date the site to 180-250 thousand years ago, which was rejected by Irwin-Williams but supported by the excavation's geologist, Harold E. Malde, and tephrochronologist, Virginia Steen-McIntyre. Irwin-Williams dated the site to approximately 22,000 years ago.

Series 4: Professional, 1960-1990, undated

9.45 Linear feet (20 document boxes, portions of 2 oversize boxes, and 2 rolled items)

1 Floppy disc

Arrangement: This series is composed of 6 subseries: (4.1) Biographical and personal, 1965-1990, undated; (4.2) Eastern New Mexico University, 1960-circa 1983, undated; (4.3) Hunter College, circa 1961; (4.4) Job applications, 1963-1965, 1989-1990; (4.5) Lectures, 1977-1980, undated; and (4.6) University of Nevada Reno, 1980-1990.

Scope and Contents: This series contains administrative materials, correspondence, lecture and research notes, student papers and theses, certificates and awards, multiple drafts of Irwin-Williams' CV dating to different points in her career, and job application materials. Of particular interest are the autobiographical narratives in the first sub-series, which demonstrate the difficulties faced by Irwin-Williams in the early stages of her career and the discrimination she faced as a female archaeologist, and the materials related to her decline in health and loss of status at the Desert Research Institute in the sixth subseries (many of these are currently restricted).

Restrictions: Graded student papers and grants containing social security numbers (unless the number belongs to someone known to be deceased) have been restricted for eighty years from the date of their creation. Materials related to Irwin-Williams' health have been restricted until 2040 (fifty years after her death) and materials related to evaluations of her employees have been restricted for eighty years from the date of their creation.

Subseries 4.1: Biographical and personal, 1965-1990, undated

Arrangement: This subseries is arranged alphabetically.

Scope and Contents: This subseries contains multiple drafts of Irwin-Williams' CV dating to different points in her career; diplomas, awards, and certificates; autobiographical narratives; and materials related to Irwin-Williams' inclusion in the Smithsonian Institution's Daughters of the Desert exhibition. Of particular interest are the autobiographical narratives, which demonstrate the difficulties faced by Irwin-Williams in the early stages of her career and the discrimination she faced as a female archaeologist.

Box 162, Folder 26 Lectures 1980-1981, 1980

Subseries 4.6: University of Nevada Reno, 1980-1990

Arrangement: This subseries is arranged alphabetically.

Scope and Contents: This subseries contains materials related to Irwin-Williams' years working at the University of Nevada Reno (UNR) and the Desert Research Institute (DRI). The majority of the subseries relates to DRI and includes administrative materials, grant applications, research projects, notes, and correspondence. Of particular interest are administrative materials related to the growth of the Social Sciences Center / Quaternary Science Center under her guidance, the research conducted by the center, and materials related to her deteriorating health and loss of status (many of which are currently restricted).

Restrictions: Grants containing social security numbers (unless the number belongs to someone known to be deceased) and materials containing employee evaluations have been restricted for eighty years from the date of their creation and materials related to Irwin-Williams' health have been restricted until 2040 (fifty years after her death).

Series 6: Correspondence, 1940-1941, 1959-1989, undated

3.82 Linear feet (8.5 document boxes)

Arrangement: This series is arranged in two subseries; (1.1) General correspondence, 1960, 1970-1989, undated, and (1.2) Alphabetical correspondence, 1940-1941, 1959-1989, undated.

Scope and Contents: This series contains both personal and professional correspondence. Of particular interest is the correspondence between Irwin-Williams and her mother, Eleanor "Kay" Irwin. Although Kay moved to Boston once both of her children were at school there, for the first two years of Irwin-Williams' time at Radcliffe, while her mother still lived in Denver, they corresponded almost daily. Additional correspondence can be found filed with other materials throughout the rest of the collection.

Restrictions: Reviews of grants, references, and recommendations made by Irwin-Williams have been restricted for eighty years from their date of creation.

Subseries 6.1: General correspondence, 1960, 1970-1989, undated

Arrangement: This subseries is arranged alphabetically.

Scope and Contents: This subseries contains files of correspondence which were grouped by Irwin-Williams by topic or date. The correspondence is primarily professional.

Restrictions: Reviews of grants, references, and recommendations made by Irwin-Williams have been restricted for eighty years from their date of creation.

Series 7: Photographs and Artwork, 1939, 1964-1990, undated

5.63 Linear feet (6 document boxes, 5 negative boxes, portions of 2 oversize boxes, and portions of 1 map folder)

Arrangement: This series is arranged alphabetically by subject matter.

Scope and Contents: This series contains photographic negatives, prints, and slides; a large watercolor; and a sketchbook. The majority of the photographs relate to fieldwork conducted by Irwin-Williams. There are additional photographs from her excavations within Subseries 1.1: Archaeology, organized within the files of the related fieldwork. The series also contains numerous photographs of Irwin-Williams, usually on excavation sites.

Valsequillo, 1966, undated

Notes: Valsequillo, in Puebla, Mexico, was the first major excavation that Irwin-Williams headed. It was discovered by Irwin-Williams and Juan Armenta Camacho, who co-headed the excavation, while

Irwin-Williams was seeking out sites in Mexico in 1959-1960 and conducted between 1962 and 1966. There are two major controversies surrounding the excavations at Valsequillo. The first is a result of allegations made by Jose Luis Lorenzo, the chief of the department and laboratories of prehistory in the Instituto Nacional de Antropología y Historia, that Irwin-Williams had planted the artifacts she found. She refuted this accusation in Comments on Allegations by J. L. Lorenzo Concerning Archaeological Research at Valsequillo, Puebla, Miscellaneous Publications, no. 1 (Portales: Paleoindian Institute, Eastern New Mexico University). The second controversy involves the dating of the site as the Uranium-series dates performed by B. Szabo of the United States Geological Survey date the site to 180-250 thousand years ago, which was rejected by Irwin-Williams but supported by the excavation's geologist, Harold E. Malde, and tephrochronologist, Virginia Steen-McIntyre. Irwin-Williams dated the site to approximately 22,000 years ago.
