Collection Overview

Repository:	National Anthropological Archives
Title:	Chris Gjording papers
Identifier:	NAA.2008-19
Date:	1966-1991 (bulk 1977-1991)
Extent:	6.34 Linear feet (15 document boxes, 1 cassette tape, and 37 computer disks)
Creator:	Gjording, Chris N., 1943-1993
Language:	Multiple languages  Many of the materials in the collection are in Spanish.
Summary:	The papers of Chris Gjording primarily document his research and activities in Central America, particularly his research on the Guaymíes and the Cerro Colorado copper mining project in Chiriquí, Panama. Materials pertaining to Panama include Gjording's field notes (portions of which are missing due to severe insect infestation); photographs; reference materials he collected; and his writings, which include his articles, dissertation, and drafts of his dissertation revised for publication. In addition to his work in Panama are his field notes and photographs from his research on campesino communities in Guatemala and El Salvador. Gjording also kept subject files on Latin American countries, focusing on the poor and oppressed and the social and political climate. His writings on those subjects are present in the collection and include a draft of his unpublished paper on peasant uprising in El Salvador and issues of Informaciones, the Spanish-language newsletter that Gjording published and wrote articles for in Honduras. The collection also contains correspondence and notes relating to his visits to the Guatemalan Indian refugee camps in Los Lirios and Maya Balam in Quintana Roo in Mexico. In addition, the collection contains some of his correspondence with his mentor Ricardo Falla, a Guatemalan Jesuit priest and anthropologist, whom he refers to as "RF" in his notes. The collection also contains computer disks with chapters in Spanish from Falla's book on Ixcán, possibly Masacres de la selva: Ixcán, Guatemala, 1975-1982 (1992).

Administrative Information

Acquisition Information

These papers were donated to the National Anthropological Archives by Karin Gjording.

Processing Information

The papers of Chris Gjording were received partially organized. The processing archivist kept existing groupings and arrangement and organized the collection into seven series. Original folder titles were retained with titles assigned by the archivist placed within square brackets.

Due to insect infestation that the collection suffered prior to its transfer to the National Anthropological Archives, a large amount of the Panamanian field notes were eaten through and stained with insect droppings (frass). Most of these materials were photocopied and the originals discarded. Pages with minor damage and minimal amounts of insect droppings were not photocopied and were retained as is. Those who are allergic to frass should be aware that folders containing materials stained with insect droppings have been marked "[insect damage]" in the finding aid and on the folders.

Biographical Note

Chris Gjording was an anthropologist and Jesuit priest, best known for his research on the Guaymí people of Panama and how they were affected by a transnational copper mining project on their land.

Gjording was born on January 12, 1943 in Los Angeles, California. In 1960 he entered a Jesuit seminary in Sheridan, Oregon and obtained his A.B. in philosophy from Spring Hill College in 1966. After earning his M.A. in philosophy from Tulane University (1967) and his M.Div. in theology from the Toronto School of Theology (1973), he was ordained as a Jesuit priest in Spokane, Washington. He taught philosophy and liberation theology at Gonzaga University (1973-75) before continuing his education at the New School for Social Research, where he received his M.A. (1978) and Ph.D. (1985) in social and cultural anthropology.

As both a priest and anthropologist, he felt that "field research essentially involves interpersonal relationships; and [he had] no category for engaging in such relationships with nothing in view as a potential benefit for the other." (Gjording's journal, January 11, 1978) Influenced by liberation theology, Gjording consequently focused his research on the rural poor of Central America during a period of social and political turmoil.

As a graduate student in 1977, Gjording spent the summer conducting ethnographic fieldwork among campesino communities in Chinacá, Guatemala and in Chirilagua, San Miguel, El Salvador. He returned to Central America the following year to work in Chiriquí, Panama with Centro de Estudios y Acción Social (CEASPA), a Jesuit-sponsored organization, as the anthropologist on an interdisciplinary team studying the Cerro Colorado copper mining project and its impact on Panama. Gjording's research focused on the Guaymí people, who lived on the land where the mining project was to occur. His research became the subject of his dissertation, "The Cerro Colorado Copper Project: Panama, Multinational Corporations and the Guaymí Indians." A revised version of the dissertation was published by the Smithsonian Institution Press in 1991 as Conditions Not of Their Choosing: The Guaymí Indians and Mining Multinationals in Panama.

Gjording left Panama in 1982 but returned to Central America after completing his dissertation in 1985 to serve as codirector of Equipo de Reflexión, Investigación y Comunicación (E.R.I.C.), a Jesuit organization in El Progreso, Yoro, Honduras. As part of his responsibilities, he published and wrote many of the articles for Informaciones, a bimonthly newsletter in Spanish on the social, political, and economic situation in Honduras. In addition, he wrote articles for the Panamanian magazine Diálogo Social; due to the political climate in Panama, he wrote some of the articles under the pseudonym "Enrique Lobo," a name he chose in honor of the anthropologist Eric Wolf. From 1987 to 1989, he made several trips to the Guatemalan refugee camps in Quintana Roo, Mexico. He conducted informal research on the background and situation of the refugees and taught workshops that provided them guidance on whether to return to Guatemala or stay in Mexico.

Gjording returned to the United States in 1989 on a sabbatical from Central America. He left the priesthood in 1991 and obtained a position teaching anthropology and peace studies at Guilford College in Greensboro, North Carolina.

Gjording died of lung cancer on July 5, 1993 at the age of 50.

Scope and Contents

The papers of Chris Gjording primarily document his research and activities in Central America, particularly his research on the Guaymíes and the Cerro Colorado copper mining project in Chiriquí, Panama. Materials pertaining to Panama include Gjording's field notes (portions of which are missing due to severe insect infestation); photographs; reference materials he collected; and his writings, which include his articles, dissertation, and drafts of his dissertation revised for publication. In addition to his work in Panama are his field notes and photographs from his research on campesino communities in Guatemala and El Salvador. Gjording also kept subject files on Latin American countries, focusing on the poor and oppressed and the social and political climate. His writings on those subjects are present in the collection and include a draft of his unpublished paper on peasant uprising in El Salvador and issues of Informaciones, the Spanish-language newsletter that Gjording published and wrote articles for in Honduras. The collection also contains correspondence and notes relating to his visits to the Guatemalan Indian refugee camps in Los Lirios and Maya Balam in Quintana Roo in Mexico. In addition, the collection contains some of his correspondence with his mentor Ricardo Falla, a Guatemalan Jesuit priest and anthropologist, whom he refers to as "RF" in his notes. The collection also contains computer disks with chapters in Spanish from Falla's book on Ixcán, possibly Masacres de la selva: Ixcán, Guatemala, 1975-1982 (1992).

Additional materials in the collection are copies of Gjording's curriculum vitae; his student papers; and his college and graduate school diplomas. In addition, the collection contains a letter approving Gjording's advancement to the diaconate and priesthood and his decree of dismissal from the Society of Jesus in 1991.

Please note that the contents of the collection and the language and terminology used reflect the context and culture of the time of its creation. As an historical document, its contents may be at odds with contemporary views and terminology and considered offensive today. The information within this collection does not reflect the views of the Smithsonian Institution or National Anthropological Archives, but is available in its original form to facilitate research.

Series 1: Correspondence, 1985-1991

0.08 Linear feet

Many of the letters from Central America are in Spanish.

This is a small series consisting of letters to Gjording from friends and colleagues.

Correspondence relating to Gjording's dissertation and the publication of his dissertation are in Series 2. Panama. Letters can also be found in Series 3. Latin America, Series 5. Personal Files, and Series 7. Computer Disks.

Letters within the folders are arranged in chronological order.

Box 1	C.A. Letters, 1985-1990 Mostly in Spanish. Letters from Central America.
Box 1	Correspondence -- Jesuits, 1985-1991
Box 1	Correspondence -- Other, 1985-1988
Box 1	[Letters], 1985-1990 Letters from friends and colleagues, mostly from William Roseberry; also a letter from Eric Wolf

Series 2: Panama, 1977-1991

2.33 Linear feet

Due to insect infestation, a large amount of the field notes were eaten through and stained with insect droppings. While most of these materials were photocopied and the originals discarded, there are still materials with minimal amounts of insect droppings present in this series. Those who are allergic to frass should be aware that folders containing papers stained with insect droppings have been marked "[insect damage]" at the end of the folder titles.

The first folder in this series relates to Gjording's evaluation of Fe y Alegria and the agency's development-related work with Panamanian Indians. The folder contains correspondence and the report he submitted to Fe y Alegria.

The rest of the series pertains to Gjording's research on the Guaymies and the Cerro Colorado copper mining project in Chiriquí, Panama from 1978 to 1981. The discovery of one of the world's largest copper reserves at Cerro Colorado developed into a large-scale project that involved the Panama government and multinational mining corporations on the tribal land of the Guaymies. Gjording was an anthropologist on an interdisciplinary team sponsored by the Jesuit-sponsored Centro de Estudios y Acción Social --Panamá (CEASPA) to study the mining project and its impacts on Panama on the local, regional, national, and transnational levels. The ultimate goal of the team was to provide information and analyses to those who would be affected by the mining project, which was eventually abandoned due to falling copper prices. The series contains Gjording's field notes, research notes, and research materials that he collected. Articles he published on the subject can also be found in this series, including those that he wrote under the pseudonym, "Enrique Lobo." His dissertation, "The Cerro Colorado Copper Project: Panama, Multinational Corporations and the Guaymi Indians," can be found towards the end of this series along with a paper by his friend Michael Herzog on the strategies he used to help Gjording complete his dissertation. A revised version of the dissertation was published by the Smithsonian Institution Press in 1991 as Conditions Not of Their Choosing: The Guaymí Indians and Mining Multinationals in Panama. A draft of the publication and correspondence with the Smithsonian are at the end of the series.

Please see Series 4. Panama and Series 6. Photographs for more materials relating to Guaymies and the Cerro Colorado mining project. More drafts of Conditions Not of Their Choosing can be found in Series 7. Computer Disks.

Series 3: Latin America, 1977-1990

1.67 Linear feet

This series contains Gjording's research files on countries in Latin America, with the exception of Panama. Most of Gjording's research and work focused on the poor and oppressed people in Central America and the political and social climate in those nations; however, materials on South American countries are also present in this series. The series is mostly composed of magazine and newspaper clippings, papers written by others, and Gjording's notes. Some of his writings can also be found in this series including a draft of his paper on peasant uprising in El Salvador; his article "Nicaragua's Unfinished Revolution;" and copies of Informaciones, the Spanish-language newsletter that Gjording wrote for and published from 1985 to 1988 as co-director of Equipo de Reflexión, Investigación y Comunicación (E.R.I.C.) in Honduras. This series also contains correspondence and notes relating to his visits to the Guatemalan Indian refugee camps in Los Lirios and Maya Balam in Quintana Roo in Mexico.

Please see Series 4. Journals for more of Gjording's notes in Central America, including his field notes as a graduate student studying campesinos communities in Chinacá, Guatemala and Chirilagua, San Miguel, El Salvador. Series 7. Computer Disks contains Gjording's reflections of his time in Honduras. Files pertaining to Panama are in Series 2. Panama.

This series is arranged in 8 subseries: (3.1) Latin America; (3.2) El Salvador; (3.3) Guatemala; (3.4) Honduras; (3.5) Mexico; (3.6) Nicaragua; (3.7) Peru; (3.8) Venezuela
