Summary:	Terence "Terry" Sheldon Turner (1935-2015) was best known for his ethnographic work among the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) people of the Amazon rainforest and his work as an activist for the Mebêngôkre and other communities. This collection documents his interest in the Mebêngôkre and his work as a human rights activist. It includes field notes, censuses, papers, notes, correspondence, news clippings, sound recordings, films, photographs, charts and diagrams, genealogy and kinship information, and computer discs.

Administrative Information

Acquisition Information

The Terence Turner papers were donated to the National Anthropological Archives by Turner's wife, Jane Fajans, in 2020.

Related Materials

Materials related to the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) in the National Anthropological Archives (NAA) can also be found in the William Lipkind papers and Photo Lot 79-1. Materials related to the Yanomami in the NAA can also be found in the Timothy Asch papers, the American Anthropological Association records, and Photo Lot 94-28. Materials related to the Yanomami in the Human Studies Film Archives (HSFA) can be found in the Timothy Asch and Napoleon Chagnon films of the Yanomamo.

Processing Information

Turner's papers were rehoused in acid free folders and boxes. Reprints and photocopies of printed materials were removed unless they were annotated by Turner. Post-it notes were photocopied onto acid free paper and then removed. Loose papers were grouped into folders by the archivist based on content. Titles in square brackets were supplied by the archivist. The contents of these folders may have been loose in a box or may have been in unlabeled folders. Abbreviations in titled folders have been expanded in the finding aid for clarity. The abbreviations have been maintained on the folders themselves.

When received by the archives, the materials were only roughly organized. Some order was imposed by the archivist, but some organization is still rough.

Biographical Note

Terence "Terry" Sheldon Turner (1935-2015) was best known for his ethnographic work with the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) people of the Amazon rainforest and his work as an activist for the Mebêngôkre and other communities. He was born in Philadelphia and raised outside of Washington, DC. He earned his A.B. from Harvard University (1957) and M.A. from the University of California, Berkeley (1959), in Modern European History. His interest in how society functions brought him to the Department of Social Relations at Harvard University for his Ph.D. (1965), where his studies turned to Social Anthropology. His interests were still in Europe, but his advisor, David Maybury-Lewis, persuaded him to study the Mebêngôkre in Brazil (Moberg). Despite his initial intentions, Turner developed a lasting relationship with the Mebêngôkre, who gave him the name Wakampu. He worked with the community for more than 50 years, visiting them over 20 times.

Turner and his then wife, Joan Bamberger, lived with the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) from 1962 to 1964 while conducting research for their dissertations. His initial studies were on socio-cultural change, social organization, political systems, dual organization, a comparison to other Gê tribes, and mythology. Joan studied Mebêngôkre material culture, as it related to both function and significance. Turner's interest in mythology and the ties between the structure and motifs of myths to social structure led him to spend a year (1966-1967) at the University of Paris where Claude Lévi-Strauss was working on a project involving comparisons of mythology and social structure of different Central Brazilian indigenous groups.

Turner taught at Cornell University from 1966 to 1968, at the University of Chicago from 1968 to 1999, and then returned to Cornell from 1999 to 2015 where his wife, Jane Fajans, was also a professor. While teaching at the University of Chicago, Turner developed an interest in Karl Marx and the applications of his theories to anthropology (Moberg). He stated in a Guggenheim grant application that "Another main line of theoretical effort has been my attempt to generalize Marx's concept of value to account for the forms of social value generated in such forms of 'social production', in particular those of the Kayapo and other primitive, classless societies" (Terence Turner papers). In an interview for an article in the Chicago Reader, he said that "The Kayapo didn't have an economic sphere. They didn't have commodity production. Production for them in an immediate sense is production of their lives, and of course then you realize—wow!—this is a society for which the complete human being through all stages of life, right up to death, is the supreme product. It's the most complex and demanding product, and the social order is the whole process of producing that product" (Moberg). His interest in Marx led him to study Piaget, Vygotsky, Leont'ev, and Zinchenko, who "provided analytically principled ways of connecting material activity with forms of consciousness" (Terence Turner papers).

Turner was interested in visual anthropology. He assisted in the production of three British documentaries on the Mebêngôkre people: the BBC's Face Values in 1976 and Granada Television's Disappearing World series episodes "The Kayapo" and "The Kayapo: Out of the Forest" in 1987 and 1989. He also assisted the Mebêngôkre in documenting their own culture. The Mebêngôkre had obtained video cameras in 1985 and Turner encouraged them to obtain more cameras from the Granada crew in return for access to the community in 1987 (Harms). In 1990, he created the Kayapo Video Project, which funded the purchase of cameras, education for the Mebêngôkre filmmakers in filming and editing, and preserving the original footage at the Kayapo Video Archive/Arquivo de Vídeo Kaiapo at the Centro de Trabalho Indigenista. Turner stated in a 1996 request for funding that the purpose of the project was "to generate an extensive archive of videos about all aspects of Kayapo culture and ecological knowledge, and simultaneously build up a cadre of well-trained video camerapersons and video-editors capable of continuing video-making and using activities into the future. The videos will be produced (both shot and edited) by the Kayapo themselves. They will form the backbone of a larger project of Kayapo cultural preservation, provide visual tests for use in a projected Kayapo educational program, and also generate a unique audio-visual record of the ecological knowledge and technology of a major Amazonian culture" (Terence Turner papers).

Turner was also very involved in human rights work and activism for indigenous communities. He felt it was the responsibility of anthropologists to defend the rights of the people whom they studied. He was involved in "anthropological activism," assisting the Mebêngôkre and others in their fight to protect their rights and environment. This interest began when Turner investigated the movement of miners, loggers, and poachers onto Mebêngôkre lands for FUNAI (the Fundação Nacional do Índio) (Harms). There were widespread protests against these incursions by the Mebêngôkre beginning in the early 1970s, which resulted in the Mebêngôkre gaining land rights. Despite this success, conflicts between the Mebêngôkre and Brazilian nationals, as well as within the Mebêngôkre community, continued. Turner both observed and participated in many of these protests and documented the ways in which these actions affected Mebêngôkre society and culture. Two of the most important protests concerned the planned construction of a series of hydroelectric dams on the Xingú River. The first protest, at Altamira in 1989, successfully derailed the project. The success of this protest brought international attention to the Mebêngôkre, who sent representatives to Canada in 1992 to support the Cree, who were protesting the construction of a hydroelectric dam there. The Brazilian government redesigned their original plans for the series of dams on the Xingú River; when these plans were leaked in 2008, another protest ensued. Turner and his daughter, Vanessa, documented this protest.

Turner's commitment to human rights led to him becoming a founding member of the American Anthropological Association's Ethics Committee (1969-1972) and Committee for Human Rights (1992-1997), serving as president of Survival International, U.S.A., heading the Special Commission of the American Anthropological Association to Investigate the Situation of the Brazilian Yanomami (1990-1991), and receiving the Solon T. Kimball Award from the American Anthropological Association in 1998.

Scope and Contents

The Terence Turner papers contain materials related to his work as an anthropologist and human rights activist. Turner's primary focus of research was the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) people of the Amazon rainforest. The collection contains field notes, censuses, papers and draft manuscripts, correspondence, notes, news clippings, sound recordings, films, photographs, charts and diagrams, genealogy and kinship information, and computer discs relating to that interest. His work in human rights is also well documented; the collection contains notes, papers, correspondence, and news clippings. A significant amount of the human rights material relates to the Yanomami controversy which arose when Turner and Leslie Sponsel sent the American Anthropological Association a memo warning of the furor that was likely to result from the publication of the book Darkness in El Dorado by Patrick Tierney. The human rights materials in the collection also include materials relating to the Mebêngôkre and their environmental protection protests and demonstrations. The film and video primarily relate to the Granada Television films for which he consulted and the films produced by the Kayapo with the help of the Kayapo Video Project. There are some materials relating to courses which he taught or took.

Arrangement

This collection is arranged in 7 series: (1) Research, 1952-2015; (2) Human rights, ethics, and activism, circa 1964-2015; (3) Papers, conferences, and courses, 1959-2013; (4) Correspondence and contacts, 1966-2008; (5) Computer files, 1983-2010; (6) Photographs, 1938-1942, 1952, 1962-2014; (7) Sound recordings, 1962, 1976-2003; and (8) Film and video, 1975-2008

Orthography

The archivist uses Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) or Mebêngôkre to refer to the Mebêngôkre people. However, Turner and other anthropologists whose work is included in the collection used other spelling variations (Mëbêngôkre, Mebengokre, Megengokré, Kayapó, Kayapo, Kaiapó, Kaiapo, Cayapó, Cayapo, and Caiapo) which have not be altered in folder titles or descriptions.

The archivist uses Yanomami to refer to the Yanomami (Yanoama) people. Some folder titles or contents may use the Yanomamö spelling.

Container Listing

Series 1: Research, 1952-2015

16.85 Linear feet (34 document boxes, 1 half-document box, 1 oversize box, and 2 shoe boxes)

Arrangement: This series is arranged in seven subseries: (1.1) Mebêngôkre (Kayapó), 1952-2015, undated; (1.2) Kinship and social organization, 1961-2010, undated; (1.3) Myth and ritual, 1958-2000, undated; (1.4) Emotion, sentiments, body, and bodily decoration, 1980-2000, undated; (1.5) Brazil policy and grant applications, 1964-1966, 1976-2008, undated; (1.6) Amazon colleagues, 1956-2013, undated; and (1.7) Posters and maps, 1995-2009

Scope and Contents: This series contains materials related to Turner's research. His primary focus of research was the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó), and although the first subseries is the only one which is strictly Mebêngôkre, the subsequent subseries all contain related materials. The materials primarily include field notes, papers and draft manuscripts, notes, correspondence, news clippings, charts and diagrams, and genealogy and kinship information.

1.1: Mebêngôkre (Kayapó), 1952-2015, undated

Arrangement: Some of the groupings within this subseries were present when the collection was received by the archives; this organization was maintained. The remainder of the groupings were imposed by the archivist and arranged chronologically. Some folders have been removed from their chronological position to be grouped with related folders of an earlier date.

Scope and Contents: This subseries contains materials related to Turner's work with the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó). The materials include field notes, genealogies, kinship charts, maps, notes, correspondence, papers, vocabulary, books and other texts, news clippings, and photos.

Series 2: Human rights, ethics, and activism, circa 1964-2015

9.58 Linear feet (23 document boxes)

Arrangement: This series is arranged in three subseries: (2.1) Human rights, 1968, 1986-2012, undated; (2.2) Activism, 1976-2015, undated; and (2.3) Yanomami controversies, circa 1964-2014, undated

Scope and Contents: This series includes materials related to Turner's work in the field of human rights. Materials primarily include papers, notes, correspondence, news clippings, and interviews.

2.1: Human rights, 1968, 1986-2012, undated

Arrangement: The subseries begins with a section on the Committee for Human Rights (CfHR) of the American Anthropological Association (AAA) and then proceeds chronologically. Some folders have been removed from their chronological position to be grouped with related folders of an earlier date.

Scope and Contents: This subseries contains materials related to Turner's work with human rights, specifically in relation to indigenous rights, intellectual property rights, and the environment. The first section relates to his work for the American Anthropological Association's Committee for Human Rights, and the remainder of the materials relate to his interest in the topic outside of the committee. Materials include papers, notes, memos, correspondence, and news clippings.

2.3: Yanomami controversies, circa 1964-2014, undated

Arrangement: This subseries is arranged in two sections: Special Commission to Investigate the Situation of the Brazilian Yanomami and Darkness in El Dorado controversy.

Scope and Contents: This subseries includes materials related to the two major controversies concerning the Yanomami people with which Turner was involved. The first of these arose from the Brazilian government allowing mining and logging in Yanomami territories, which led to the Haximu or Yanomami Massacre in 1993. In 1990, when it became clear that the Brazilian government was not inclined to create a Yanomami reservation which covered their territory, the American Anthropological Association created a Special Commission to Investigate the Situation of the Brazilian Yanomami. Turner chaired this commission and this subseries includes materials related to this investigation including correspondence, press releases, reports, interviews, and papers. The second controversy arose in 2000, just prior to the publication of Darkness in El Dorado by Patrick Tierney, when Turner and Leslie Sponsel warned the AAA that the book would incite controversy. The materials related to this controversy include papers, correspondence, books, news clippings, and interviews.

Scope and Contents: This series contains films and materials related to films. The majority of the films relate to the Mebêngôkre (Kayapó) or were created by the Mebêngôkre. The related materials include papers, correspondence, notes, scripts and transcripts, and news clippings. The titles and descriptions of the recordings have been transcribed from information on the videos or discs. Additional information from boxes is sometimes included in individual notes. The content of recordings has not been verified. Many of the miniDV recordings were copied from VHS recordings in the collection as part of a project in 2003 by Mark Turin for Cornell University.

Conditions Governing Use: The National Anthropological Archives does not hold copyright to the films in this collection.

Restrictions: Please contact the archives for information on the availability of access copies of audiovisual recordings. Original audiovisual material in the National Anthropological Archives is restricted.

Processing Information: Copies of published film titles available elsewhere and blank or unplayable videos were discarded.
