Chief Shakes' Canoe at Fort Wrangell, 1886 or 1887

Creator: Partridge, W. H. (William Henry), 1858-1939

Language: Undetermined.

Notes: NAA INV.2008-11

Information provided by Stephen Loring (January 28, 2008).

Photograph of Chief Shakes' canoe full of people at Fort Wrangell. In the background is Chief Shakes' house with its two mortuary poles: Bear-Up-The-Mountain and Go-na-ka-dot (Guna.kade.t), a wealth-bringing water monster.

Chief Shakes' canoe was acquired for the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893 and came to the Smithsonian after the Fair closed. The carved bears on the canoe--the watchman at the bow and a female emerging from the stern--gave the boat one of its names: "Brown Bear Canoe" Hootz York. When exhibited at the World's Fair the canoe showed elaborate paintings along its side: at the extreme bow was painted a pilot-fish, a small whale that the Tlingit believed helped herd seals towards killerwhales, with a large killerwhale painted along the side. Chief Shakes' wife was from the Raven clan, and a raven is depicted at the stern. In the photograph, the boat does not appear to have painted designs along the side when it was in use in 1886-1887.

This man is Squealing Charlie, a speaker of Northern Pomo, who was killed in 1906. The photograph was taken by E.O. Carpenter of Ukiah, ca. 1880-1904. Other prints of this same image correctly identified as to photographer and subject, plus typical Pomo dance costume he is wearing. This information supplied by Dr. Sally McLendon, 6 February 1992, a visitor to the NAA.
