Biographical Note

David Ives Bushnell, Jr. (1875-1941) was educated in St. Louis, Missouri, and in Europe before joining his first anthropological expedition to northern Minnesota in 1899. From 1901-1904, he worked as an archaeological assistant at the Peabody Museum at Harvard University and continued his studies in anthropology. In addition to excavations and studies, Bushnell went to Europe in 1904 and documented North American ethnographic material held in collections and museums there. The Smithsonian hired him as a contributor to the Handbook of American Indians (1907) before appointing him editor for the Bureau of American Ethnology (1912-1921).

Scope and Contents

Photographs depicting Aztec atlals in the Museo Nazionale di Antropologia e Etnologia of the Museo di Storia Naturale dell'Università degli Studi di Firenze, Italy, and the Museo Kircheriano in Rome. Complete images of each atlal were made by combining multiple prints. There are also extracts from Bushnell's article about the objects, "Two Ancient Mexican Atlals," American Anthropologist, vol. 8 (1906), pages 218-221.
