This accession consists of two websites maintained by the National Museum of American History.

The "Smithsonian Chips Collection" website, crawled June 18, 2014, is dedicated to the collection of objects, images, and documentation that traces the history of integrated circuits. The website includes object information, a glossary, and historical information related to circuitry. It first launched in 1998 and appears to have undergone few updates or revisions.

The "Legacies: Collecting America's History at the Smithsonian" website, crawled June 19, 2014, was developed to accompany a book by the same name published by the Smithsonian Institution Press. The website highlights objects from the collections and places them in historical context and includes an online exhibition as well as information about the book. It first launched in approximately 2001 and appears to have undergone few updates or revisions.

Materials are in electronic format.
