Descriptive Entry

This accession consists of the "Q?rius" website, maintained by the National Museum of Natural History, Office of Education and Outreach, as it existed on March 15, 2016. Q?rius allows teens and tweens - and their families and educators - to connect science with everyday experiences. It is an interactive and experimental learning space that brings the unique assets of the National Museum of Natural History - the science, researchers, and collections - out from behind the scenes. The website includes information about visiting Q?rius's physical space at the museum as well as educational activities and videos. It also includes "The Q? Blog" which launched in July 2014. Due to technical issues, many activities and videos are not included in this accession or do not function properly. Materials are in electronic format.
