Descriptive Entry

This accession consists of the Global Invasions Research Coordination Network website as it existed on February 17, 2016. The Global Invasions Research Coordination Network is funded by the National Science Foundation and organized by Colorado State University and the Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute, which also hosts the website. The network consists of an international group of 50 scientists interested in the ecology and evolution of biological invasions. The website includes information about the network and related events, activities, and news. Some content is formatted as a blog and dates from as early as July 2006. Materials are in electronic format.
