Historical Note

The Pacific Ocean Biological Survey Program (POBSP) was initiated in 1962 when the Smithsonian Institution entered into a grant agreement with the Department of Defense. From January 1963 through June 1969 Smithsonian Institution employees undertook biological surveys in an area of the Pacific Ocean spanning the equator and extending from latitude 30 degrees north to 10 degrees south and from longitude 150 degrees east to 180 degrees west, an area dotted with clusters of islands and atolls. The major goals of the program were to learn what plants and animals occurred on the islands, the seasonal variations in their numbers and reproductive activities, and the distribution and population of the pelagic birds of that area. Emphasis was placed on the banding of birds in an effort to determine migration, distribution, and abundance of pelagic sea birds. During the six and a half years of field work 1,800,000 birds were banded; approximately 150,000 observations of pelagic birds at sea were made; and biological surveys of varying intensity were made on several islands.

The principal investigator of the POBSP was Philip S. Humphrey (1926-2009), who came to the Smithsonian Institution in 1962 as curator of birds. In 1964 Humphrey became chairman of the newly created Department of Vertebrate Zoology, while retaining his position as curator of birds. In 1967 he left the Smithsonian to become director of the Museum of Natural History and chairman of the Department of Zoology at the University of Kansas. He remained principal investigator of the Survey and retained his connection with the Smithsonian as a research associate.

Descriptive Entry

These records document the administration, field work, and research activities of the Pacific Ocean Biological Survey Program, especially its bird banding, island survey, and pelagic survey programs. Included are reports, correspondence, field records, office records, contracts, data, notes, manuscripts, maps, and photographs. The records also contain material from earlier field activities in the Pacific that was collected by the POBSP.

Many of the materials in this collection have been digitized.

Series 29: SOUTHERN ISLAND CRUISE REPORTS, 1963-1968.

This series contains preliminary reports on POBSP trips to Pacific islands in area bounded by 10 degrees N and 10 degrees S latitude and 150 degrees E and 180 degrees W longitude. There are three separate island groups in this area: Howland-Baker, the Line Islands, and the Phoenix Islands. When separate island reports were made, they were generally filed with island reports rather than cruise reports. The first six Southern Island cruises (SIC) were called ATF trips.

Series 60: DATA BOOKS, 1963-1969.

The data books consist of bound copies of island survey reports, grid survey reports, project reports of various types, field notes, annual reports, and POBSP publications. It should be remembered that many of the reports are preliminary reports, and therefore, certain data may be inaccurate. Original records should be consulted when possible. Not all island reports are included, nor are all field notes. The bound data books are located in the Division of Birds Library, Natural History Building. A microfilm copy is available in the Archives. The data books are arranged in 95 volumes as follows:

Box 245
