Smithsonian Institution Archives, Record Unit 361, National Portrait Gallery, Office of Exhibitions, Exhibition Records

Historical Note

Before the Office of Exhibitions was created in 1974, individual curators in the National Portrait Gallery were responsible for organizing the Gallery's exhibitions. Upon the creation of the Office, Beverly J. Cox was named Curator of Exhibitions and became head of the office.

The Office was responsible for the design, preparation, installation, maintenance and dismantling of exhibitions. The Office continues to carry out these responsibilities, including negotiating and administering exhibition loans and coordinating plans for changing and permanent exhibition galleries.

Descriptive Entry

Records in this record unit document the exhibition research and activities of the National Portrait Gallery and its Office of Exhibitions. Particularly well represented are exhibitions mounted between 1974 and 1976, with materials documenting research and publications on numerous artists, paintings, prints, broadsides, books, documents and letters. A large amount of correspondence reflects contacts with artists, donors, and national and international art institutions and galleries, and the public reactions to the exhibitions.

The records provide documentation for the creation and preparation of exhibitions during two important periods in the United States history: exhibitions of African American art during the period immediately following the civil rights demonstrations of the 1960s, and exhibitions with themes and celebratory messages for the observance of the Bicentennial of the American Revolution in 1976. The records also document both the Gallery's history and functions of different departments.

Included in the records are correspondence between curators, artists, museum specialists and professionals, including art organizations; correspondence and memoranda with other Smithsonian curators; local galleries and studios; research notes on artists and their work; loan agreements; condition reports; exhibition reports and scripts; checklists; schedules and catalogs; architectural designs and plans; exhibition floor plans and charts; photographs, prints and color slides of exhibition objects and artists; biographies of artists; press releases; exhibition reviews; magazine and journal articles; excerpts from books; lecture notes and programs and schedules; and committee minutes. Included are administrative records, such as budgetary estimates and projections, travel and shipping vouchers and insurance policy materials.

The records are grouped by exhibition; and each exhibition constitutes a series. Users should however consult the current edition of the Guide to the Smithsonian Archives in order to identify additional related records in other record units for the National Portrait Gallery.

The Smithsonian Institution Archives cannot provide any information on art works given or loaned anonymously. Researchers who wish to obtain permission to see such information will be referred to the Office of the Registrar, National Portrait Gallery.

Series 2: "THIS NEW MAN: A DISCOURSE IN PORTRAITS." Exhibition Dates: September 28 through December 31, 1968

Designed both as an inquiry into the American character and to suggest answers to Jean de Crevecoeur's question, "What then is the American, this new man?" posed in his Letters From an American Farmer in 1782, the exhibition grouped 168 portraits into such categories as imager, idol, defender, explorer, and expatriate.

Another dimension of the exhibition included patent models of Cyrus McCormick, inventor of the reaper and telegraph relay; ornithologist John James Audubon; educator John Dewey; explorer Henry Hudson; indigenous American Powhatan; journalist Joseph Pulitzer; scientist Joseph Henry; and many other Americans whose contributions in their respective fields such as politics, medicine, history and philosophy, religion and sociology, were outstanding. Many of these individuals, both American and foreign, ranging from Ralph Waldo Emerson to Warren G. Harding, and from Alexis de Tocqueville to Arthur M. Schlesinger, volunteered answers to Crevecoeur's question. Numerous excerpts and quotations by many Americans and foreigners used in the exhibition illustrate attempts by these individuals to provide a final answer to the riddle. The exhibition offered one clue to the American national character: the American is forever in search of his unique and elusive identity.

Records in this series pertain to the organization of the exhibition. The bulk of the correspondence is between the offices of the National Portrait Gallery director, Charles Nagel, curators, other Smithsonian museums, bureaus and lenders of exhibition objects. Included are checklists, exhibition scripts, loan agreements, newspaper articles, captions, exhibition floor plans, press releases and photographs. This exhibition was curated by Riddick Vann and other members of the NPG exhibits staff.

"A Man for All Seasons" focused on John Quincy Adams, the sixth president of the United States. In 1839 when Africans of the Mendi ethnicity mutinied and captured the Amistad, the ship that was carrying them to the United States and to slavery, Adams argued their case before the United States Supreme Court and did so without pay. The exhibition included a letter sent to Adams by Cinqui, the leader of the captives, whose freedom Adams won.

Congressman Adams argued against the Mexican War. On George Washington's Birthday, 1848, a resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives to thank the officers who had led the Mexican campaigns. Adams voted a lone and forceful "No!", then collapsed across his desk. He was carried to the Speaker's room where, some hours later, he died. The desk was included in the exhibition. So were other Adams objects, such as his cane, terrestrial and celestial globes, Adams' portraits, traveling case and a daguerreotype taken by Albert Sands Southworth shortly before Adams died in 1848. Organized by the Gallery's Director, Marvin Sadik, the exhibition coincided with the publication of Andrew Oliver's Portraits of John Quincy Adams and His Wife.

These exhibition records consist of correspondence; memoranda; newspaper articles; excerpts from Adams' correspondence; photocopies of Adams' diary entries; loan agreements; exhibition script; brochures; research notes; press releases; and photographs.

Series 10: "AMERICAN SELF-PORTRAITS." Exhibition Dates: February 1 through March 15, 1974

This exhibition, organized by the International Exhibition Foundation as a loan exhibition at the National Portrait Gallery, included a collection of 109 important works selected by a historian and an author in the field of American art, Alfred Frankenstein and Ann Van Devanter, who jointly curated the exhibition as well. The exhibition depicted 300 years of changing tastes and fashion in portraiture, styles, techniques, interior decor, landscapes and characters of a diverse group of artists. Some visual materials were used to complement and supplement a particular subject in the exhibition. This series contains National Portrait Gallery correspondence, exhibition checklists, labels and scripts and an assortment of photographs of self-portraits.

Box 8

Folder 6 Labels, undated. Contains labels identifying artists whose works were exhibited in the "American Self-Portraits."

Folder 7 Lists. Contains exhibition lists, notes, shipping invoices and press releases. Includes a copy of speech by Ann Van Devanter titled, "Why Does an Artist Paint a Self-Portrait, "biographical sketch of Alfred Frankenstein and an NPG calendar of events.

Folder 8 Photographs, undated. Contains photographs, negatives, contact sheet and a color poster of self-portraits used in the exhibition.

The series consists of records of the exhibition based on Daniel Boorstin's book, The Americans: The Democratic Experience. The exhibition presented some of the men and women who, through their inventions and innovations, revolutionized America in the decades following the Civil War. The cast of characters in the exhibition included names of the famous as well as the little-known talents that helped mold the way America works, relaxes, studies, eats and lives - in short, what has become known as the American Way of Life. The exhibition also presented the portraits of Americans who, together with items related to their ideas, visualized the persistent democratizing of American life. Daniel Boorstin, assisted by members of the NPG staff, curated the exhibit.

The records in this Series contains correspondence and memoranda, exhibition captions, research notes and references, drafts of the exhibition scripts, catalog, brochure and pamphlets. Included are loan agreements, press releases, reviews of the exhibition, newspaper and journal articles, excerpts from various publications, magazines and photographs.

The exhibition, organized by Marc Pachter, historian of the Gallery, documented foreign visitors to the United States and their reactions to the young country. The exhibition focused on the observations made by travelers from Europe, Latin America, Africa, Asia and Russia. The United States was many things to these visitors: admirable to some and deplorable to others. They expressed their observations in various ways -- speeches, personal letters, diaries, maps, newspaper articles, books, paintings, sketches and even music. The exhibition illustrated the range of their diverse perspectives on a changing America, from the Revolutionary period, through slavery, the Civil War and World War I years. Some non-portrait visual materials were used to complement and supplement a particular subject in the exhibition. Marc Pachter was curator of this exhibition.

Records in this series consist of National Portrait Gallery correspondence, soliciting associative objects from the public; from private collections in the United States and abroad; loan agreements; photographs of women and men who visited the United States; documents and photographs of associative objects through which the visitors told their stories; pamphlets; brochures; excerpts from books and personal letters; newspaper articles; checklists and scripts; exhibition labels; and lists of lenders.

Series 13: "CHRISTIAN GULLAGER, PORTRAIT PAINTER TO FEDERAL AMERICA." Exhibition Dates: May 12 through September 5, 1976

This exhibition illuminated the career of the Copenhagen native, Christian Gullager (1759-1826), who came to the United States in the mid-1780s, where he spent the rest of his life, recording many leaders of the United States, wealthy and distinguished United States citizens—clergymen, lawyers, military men, doctors, judges, merchants and statesmen. These exhibition records consist of photographs of thirty portraits shown in the exhibition. The portraits span Christian Gullager's career from 1782 to about 1808. There are also correspondence, memoranda, exhibition scripts, captioned labels, biographical profiles of the subjects painted by Christian Gullager, loan agreements and news releases. Marvin Sadik was curator of this exhibition.

Series 16: "AMERICAN PRESIDENCY IN POLITICAL CARTOONS, 1776-1976."
Exhibition Dates: October 15 through November 28, 1976

The exhibition presented cartoonists' interpretations of the United States presidency and the people who occupied it over a two-hundred year period. Using more than 150 graphics to demonstrate the consistent irreverence with which political cartoonists have portrayed the nation's leaders, from George Washington to Gerald Ford, the exhibition highlighted the cartoonists' pungent and satirical criticism. Organized by the University of California, Berkeley, with support from the National Endowment for the Arts, the exhibition also illustrated the evolution of political cartoons from precise, carefully drawn early works to the latest styles adopted by contemporary artists such as Pat Oliphant, Herbert Lawrence Block (Herblock) and others. This series consists of the exhibition records, correspondence, exhibition checklists and scripts, brochures, loan agreements, photographs and photographic negatives.

The exhibition was sponsored by the University of California and the National Endowment for the Arts.
